Message From The Chair's Office

Gladys Bueso

Program Administrator
Department of Medicine
Core Administration

Gladys Bueso won the P&S Award for excellence. For 15 years, Ms. Bueso has been coordinating the Internal Medicine Residency program - at roughly 140 residents, the largest such program at Columbia - with diligence and infallible hospitality. "Gladys is the heartbeat of the program," her nominators say, "All of our successes can be tied to her incredible work ethic, organizational skills, leadership and positive can-do attitude." Each year, Ms. Bueso manages intern recruitment, resident appointments, and special events seamlessly, all while guiding residents through paperwork and other requirements and supporting program staff and faculty as well. "She gives her time, her energy, and her heart in a nearly limitless way," says a colleague. Her door is always open, and her efforts are many and meaningful, such as tracking residents' performance to help them improve, organizing healthy meals to promote resident wellness, mentoring other program coordinators, and offering crucial support to the internal medicine program's Women in Medicine group. As a testament to her impact, the Chief Residents recall, when program residents were asked on an end-of-year survey what they liked and appreciated most about the residency training program, they almost all responded with Ms. Bueso's name. "She single-handedly makes the program a joy to be a part of," they write. "She is a true gem."
